

WORKERS SHORTCHANGED

Re: Kerry Diotte's, Jan. 22 column "Labour shortage a farce." I work for a not-for-profit organization and see people everyday not being able to get by in our booming economy. They work for large Canadian companies for $8.50 and $9 an hour and most only get 25 hours of work every week. Yet these companies are awash in mega-profits. They do not listen to the market telling them to pay a living wage. These big companies should wake up and smell the coffee — for the sake of their workers and their workers' families.

DAVID WILSON